Dispensaries DO NOT Increase Crime

Study Raised During Planning Commission Hearing...

- Based on data from 2012-2015
- Read beyond the headline...
- Financial relationships in this industry have improved dramatically. We are NO LONGER A CASH BUSINESS.

“...the weak strength typical of these relationships suggests that, if Denver’s experience is representative, major spikes in crime are unlikely to occur in other places following legalization.”

The authors suggest that, rather than fighting to oppose legalized marijuana, which has become a multibillion-dollar industry and is expected to create more than a quarter of a million jobs by 2020, it may be more expedient to develop and support secure and legal ways for dispensaries to engage in financial transactions.

Summarized from Justice Quarterly, Marijuana Dispensaries and Neighborhood Crime and Disorder in Denver, Colo., by Hughes, L, Schaible, LM, and Jimmerson, K (University of Colorado Denver). Copyright 2019 The Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences.

Dispensaries DO NOT Increase Crime

“State level data covering years 2000–2019 were analyzed using the synthetic control method to find that legalizing marijuana for recreational use in Colorado and Washington was generally not associated with variations in index crime rates.

Instead, the benefits to states via harm reduction, increased tax revenue, and a more efficient allocation of policing resources ought to be more of a consideration for states when passing recreational marijuana legislation.”

Crime in a Time of Cannabis: Estimating the Effect of Legalizing Marijuana on Crime Rates in Colorado and Washington Using the Synthetic Control Method

Published by the Journal of Drug Issues in association with Florida State University, The College of Criminology & Criminal Justice

This paper studies the effects of marijuana legalization on neighborhood crime and documents the patterns in retail dispensary locations over time using detailed micro-level data from Denver, Colorado. “The results imply that an additional dispensary in a neighborhood leads to a reduction of 17 crimes per month per 10,000 residents, which corresponds to roughly a 19 percent decline relative to the average crime rate over the sample period. Reductions in crime are highly localized, with no evidence of spillover benefits to adjacent neighborhoods.”

Minimal Impact on Major Crimes: A study by Lu et al. (2019) found that the legalization and sales of marijuana in Colorado and Washington had minimal to no effect on major crimes, with no statistically significant long-term effects on violent or property crime rates in these states

Dispensaries DO NOT Have a Negative Affect on Property Value

- “On average, home values increase by $470 for every $1 million increase in tax revenue.”
- “With each new dispensary a city adds, property values increase by an average of $519.”
- “From 2014-2019 Home values increased $22,090 more in cities with recreational dispensaries, compared to home values in cities where recreational marijuana is legal but dispensaries are not available.”
- “CATO research supports our findings, suggesting homes close in proximity to marijuana retail dispensaries increase in value.”
- “Denver is a clear-cut example of dispensaries raising residential property values, but dispensaries have helped bring up property values all around Colorado. Cities in Colorado with dispensaries have higher than average property value growth compared to the national average.”
- “As states tax marijuana sales for the first time, the increased revenue drives new investment in things such as public services and infrastructure — which in turn drives higher demand in real estate, higher property values, and greater revenue from property taxes.”
- “As more states legalize marijuana, there is strong evidence that legalization drives higher property values — particularly in areas that allow recreational marijuana and welcome retail dispensaries.”
