Term Limits tend to ensure that participants cannot take a spot and lock it in not allowing someone else to be considered. However, if there are openings that are not filled, it does not seem beneficial to limit someone who wants to be engaged from doing so. It would be better managed by requiring a hiatus after serving two or three terms before being eligible to return. Having a set term defines a participant's commitment that they are being asked to make. If they choose to opt for another one and there are openings, I believe they should be considered alongside anyone else who has applied and, if all can be accommodated via the number of members that are defined for the group, they should be permitted to continue (if they were attending, participating regularly, and actively involved in their previous term.)

If a board or commission does not have applicants or has vacant positions, I do not believe others should be eliminated by term limitations for applying or participating. Especially since the City continues to add additional boards and commissions there are many opportunities for residents, business owners and individuals working in Commerce City to get involved and participate.

The term limits suggested give members enough time to work/participate on projects through their completion.
This invests the members in the work of the committee.

Thank you for the question, not all boards and commissions should have the same term limits. But their needs to be a set end date for all.

It is hard enough to get the community to participate in boards and commissions. Do not term limit. Its the Councils responsibility to vet the candidates.

City Council should do a good job of determining the background and understanding of the issues that a candidate has for the position. Putting an uninformed, unqualified person in an assignment is far more detrimental than limiting the participation of a qualified decision maker. Differing, but educated viewpoints are healthy. Uneducated and unfounded opinions are not.

Difficult decision. Why a board or commission is doing great work. It is disappointing when they become term limited. Yet when leadership is mediocre and needs a boost. You I can hardly wait for the term to end.

Term limits seem subjective, the value of a committee is more dependent on how involved members are and if there are others who would like to join that are unable to.

There definitely needs to be term limits otherwise you get people on commissions who stay there forever and you don't get new ideas or perspectives. It also does not give others the opportunity to serve. Commerce City is growing and there are a lot of newcomers here and they should be given the opportunity to participate. Thank you.

I think all the members in a comité or board should allow rotation of committee assignments .Especially if they are members who can not feel part of it

Term limits helps to prevent board chairs from burning out by shortening the time .

Help member don't feel they are bored .

In order to provide commissions with various perspectives and experiences term limits need to be implemented. This will allow for effective representation of a diverse and growing city.

COVID has a huge impact on the work our Commission is trying to do. We didn't meet for several months. Now we are meeting on Zoom. Personally, I think that whatever decision is reached on term limits. The quarantine months should not be counted as part of our terms. It takes awhile for new members to understand the work a board or commission is doing. So I think that allowing people to serve two or three terms is important, especially if the group is working on a special project.

Also, I would like to see a formal, annual introduction and training for all commissions and boards. I've served on one foundation and one commission in Commerce City. And neither provided any form of training or orientation for new members. So it can be quite confusing for new members until we have some experience with the group.

I truly believe that the current process should be the status quo. With a revolving approach. New ideas and innovations are a positive in my opinion.
