An increase of 10 decibels (dB) means that a sound is 10 times more intense and roughly twice as loud.

Explanation

- Decibels are a logarithmic unit that measure the loudness of a sound.
- A 10-fold increase in sound intensity is represented by a 10-decibel increase.
- However, humans perceive a 10-decibel increase as roughly double the loudness.
- For example, a sound that is 80 decibels is 10 times louder than a sound that is 70 decibels.
- This is because the logarithmic scale of decibels produces a large increase in loudness for each incremental increase in decibels.

Related concepts

- dBA: A variation of decibels that adjusts for the fact that humans perceive higher-pitched sounds as louder.
